COUNTS ONE THROUGH FOUR

(Wire Fraud)

The United States Attorney charges:

1. At all times relevant to this Information, MICHAEL LAIR, the defendant, held himself out as an executive of consumerdefense.com, Inc., also known as "CDI," an organization that purported to do research and investigations pertaining to consumer complaints.

2. From in or about February 2003 up to in or about October 2006, MICHAEL LAIR, the defendant, was engaged in a scheme to defraud various attorneys in high-profile litigation by promising to provide them with evidence to support their existing or contemplated litigations, in exchange for large, up-front payments. Throughout this scheme, LAIR never provided the promised evidence and continued to demand additional funds from the various victims.

3. In certain instances, during the time period relevant to this Information, after attorneys involved in the high-profile litigation refused to advance further funds to LAIR

(because LAIR had not followed through on his promises to deliver the information that he claimed to possess), LAIR approached opposing counsel in the litigation and informed opposing counsel that their adversaries had hired LAIR and directed LAIR to engage in either illegal or unethical investigative techniques. In these circumstances, LAIR claimed to have documentary proof of opposing counsel's illegal or unethical directives. In at least one instance, LAIR asked to be paid for this purported information and LAIR sent a forged email to an attorney in New York purporting to be evidence of opposing counsel's illegal activities.

4. In reality, LAIR had done little, if any, actual research or investigation prior to contacting attorneys as part of his scheme. LAIR reviewed media reports of high-profile cases and then sought to defraud the litigants in these cases and their attorneys with false promises that LAIR had evidence to assist their litigation. Despite his failure to deliver any actual evidence or information, LAIR often continued to demand payment of thousands of dollars.

5. As part of LAIR's scheme, in or about March 2006, LAIR approached an attorney practicing law in New York, New York, who represented a large pharmaceutical company then involved in a high-profile litigation with a large hedge fund. LAIR offered the attorney representing the pharmaceutical company evidence that would assist the attorney in his representation of the pharmaceutical company. After the attorney for the pharmaceutical company wire transferred LAIR an initial payment, LAIR did not produce the evidence and demanded additional funds. In or about September 2006, after the pharmaceutical company's attorney fired LAIR, LAIR approached a lawyer representing the large hedge fund on the other side of the same litigation. LAIR told an attorney for the hedge fund that the pharmaceutical company's lawyer had hired LAIR to use illegal and unethical investigative techniques in order to obtain information about the large hedge fund, including hacking into computers used by employees of the large hedge fund, illegally obtaining financial records, and using false pretexts to obtain telephone records of specific employees, commonly known as "pretexting."

6. From in or about Spring 2005 up to in or about May 2006, LAIR similarly defrauded a former CEO for a large insurance company, based in New York, New York, and the CEO's attorneys. LAIR told one of the former CEO's attorneys that he had evidence to assist in a civil litigation involving the former CEO, for which the CEO's attorneys paid LAIR approximately $75,000. LAIR did not produce the evidence that he claimed to have, and LAIR continued to demand additional funds. After LAIR was fired by the CEO's attorneys, LAIR contacted an attorney for the large insurance company on the opposite side of the litigation. LAIR told the attorney for the insurance company that the CEO's lawyers had hired LAIR to use illegal and unethical investigative techniques in order to obtain information concerning ongoing litigation.

7. Between in or about February 2003 and 2006, LAIR similarly defrauded other attorneys representing high-profile individual and corporate clients by falsely promising that he had evidence of wrongdoing to provide to the clients. In each case, LAIR requested and received payment of funds, but never delivered on his promises. In fact, LAIR did not possess any such evidence he claimed to possess. These additional victims and the amounts of money that they paid to LAIR include:

- a. attorneys in New York representing a large internet based telecommunications company involved in a trade secrets litigation, which paid $10,000;
- b. an attorney working for an internet services company involved in a high-profile litigation with hedge funds, which paid $50,000;
- c. an attorney representing a client, which paid $10,000;
- d. an attorney contemplating litigation against a large software development company, which paid $25,000;
- e. an attorney representing an investor in connection with a New York litigation against a computer software company and its outside auditors, which paid $35,000;

- f. the general counsel of a large insurance company based in New York, which paid $22,039;
- g. attorneys representing a lithography company, which paid $13,213;
- h. an attorney representing individuals who had sued a large credit card company, and who paid at least $20,000;
- i. an attorney representing a telecommunications company involved in a high-profile contract dispute, which paid $30,000;
- j. an attorney representing a software company in the process of acquiring another software company, which paid $15,000.
